

動物方城市組 佳作 / 洪梓榆 (民族一)

Consider Nick's experience and this conversation from the film.

Nick: If the world's only going to see a fox as shifty and untrustworthy, there's no point in trying to be anything else.

Judy: Nick, you are so much more than that.

In your opinion, is it possible to break free from negative stereotypes that society places upon us? If so, how? If not, why not?

My Feedback on the Film Zootopia

In the following writing passage, I will give two reasons for why I believe that it is possible to break free from negative stereotypes that society places upon us.

The first reason is if we prove that we are not as bad as the society's negative stereotype, society may change their prejudice toward us. One example is Judy Hopps. Most of the animals in the film, even Judy's parents, don't respect her dream as admirable, but she still never gives up. She tries her best to be an awesome police officer, and she finally proves herself with her courage and perseverance. Judy lets everybody know that although little rabbits' small body type puts them in an inferior position, they are not weak. Another example is Nick. He suffered from the prejudice of other animals when he was a kid, so he decides to be regarded as a bad guy when he is older. But after he meets Judy, everything changes. He starts to be a valuable person, and he even becomes a police officer in the end. He succeeds in changing the stereotype that foxes are cunning and savage.

The second reason is if we don't keep the anger and frustration that the negative stereotypes bring to our minds, our spirits and thoughts will still be free. No one can limit us. No one can stop Judy from dreaming to become a police woman. In addition, the sloth can drive a sports car, Mr. Big is a small Rodentia animal, and we are free in terms of our imagination. In the world of Zootopia, everything is possible, and I am deeply convinced that it can be realized in the real world.

This is my opinion and viewpoint. Thanks for reading.
