

動物方城市組 第二名 / 李婉綺 (地政一)

Consider this line from the film: "This is Zootopia, where anyone can be anything." In your opinion, is it really possible for anyone to do anything they want in your culture or society? Why or why not?

---

Not Everyone Can Do Anything, Only Those Who Are "Different" Can Do Anything They Want.

In the following passage, I will give three reasons for why I think it is impossible for "everyone" to do anything they want in the society. After that, I will comment on what kinds of people can do anything they want.

First, most people in the society are normal, just like Judy's parents, who live their life as common rabbits. They don't have special abilities, indestructible resolutions, or dreams to chase. All they have is a piece of farm and a simple life. They have either never even thought of being "different" or they have given up early in life. Lacking in courage, determination, and dreams leads to the result that not everyone can do anything.

The second reason is the society's pressure and stereotype. For example, Judy was unwelcome the first time she walked into the police station. Chief Bogo didn't trust her just because she looked like a harmless and peaceful rabbit. He thought Judy couldn't do anything even though she had an outstanding performance at school.

The last reason comes from physiological differences. It is what people are born with. For example, men have more power than women, and the predators are stronger than the preys. Also, some people have birth defects, which prevents them from doing what common people can easily achieve.

Because of these three reasons, I think most people are not able to do anything they want. However, I also believe that there are people like Judy, who are "different". They may have indomitable spirits, a burning passion, and the firm attitude to chase their dreams. Although the road may be tough, those who are "different" will never give up, just like the main character of Zootopia, Judy Hopps, the rabbit who perfectly solves the biggest problem of the city and finally becomes a famous police officer.